Complying With the Code

We have a national presence and our volunteers and clients are representatives of our organization. They are expected to comply with the Code of Ethics. Should any board member, officer, client or volunteer suspect or observe that there has been a violation of the code or the organization's policies, they should report the violation immediately to their main point of contact at the organization or to the regional executive or program director.

Professionalism

We conduct ourselves with professionalism in pursuit of the highest standards. We exceed our high standards by setting each other up for success. Our core value of excellence exemplifies how we should treat our fellow volunteers, clients, employees and donors.

Any conduct that fails to exemplify excellence in our interactions with others violates our core values and our Code of Ethics. The following are examples of prohibited conduct, but this is not an all-inclusive list: theft, dishonesty, violence, discrimination, harassment, safety violations, ignoring rights of others, gossip, and insensitivity to the beliefs and customs of others.

Harassment and Discrimination

You are expected to maintain a productive environment that is free from harassing or disruptive activity. No form of harassment will be tolerated. Our Code of Ethics prohibits sexual harassment or harassment based on any protected class as outlined by federal, state or local law, ordinance or regulation. Do not attempt to step into a situation that could escalate.

If there is an immediate need, call 911.

Reporting Violations

You should share your questions, concerns and suggestions with someone who can address them properly. For concerns related to the Code of Ethics, the following procedures should be followed:

- In most cases, a volunteer's volunteer coordinator is in the best position to address an area of concern for a volunteer. For clients, your regional Client Services department is the place to start. However, if you are not comfortable with that option, you are encouraged to speak with the executive or program director of the region.
- All are required to report suspected violations of the Code of Ethics relating to financial matters to the organization's chief financial officer, who has specific and exclusive responsibility to investigate all such reported violations.
